The Power of a Believer Who Never Gives Up on His Missions or His Friends

I knew Kevin from my days while living in Dallas. I never thought that our kids would have been swimming together. Kevin Sorbo and I have known each other for years. We had a mutual friend, his roommate Jeff Weber whom I was dating when we were all living in Dallas. Kevin was acting and taking some modeling gigs. Actors have to be creative in making money until they land that big job! One of Kevin's creative jobs was unwittingly preparing him for his lead role in Hercules. Kevin was working as a bouncer at a place called Confetti's. It was a happening place. You may have heard of some big names that both walked and danced these floors including Mark Cuban and Ross Perot. It would not have been a surprise seeing some celebrities there while passing through Dallas. Smart exposure for Kevin plus he knew how to keep those Texas men who are known to be rowdy after a few drinks in line. Kevin has always been a very nice looking man. I remember heading out to visit his roommate Jeff and my girlfriends would plead to come with me so that they could see Kevin. He was already a star then and did not even know it. I had one girlfriend actually try to climb up to Kevin's bedroom window but she did not quite make it. Even then I remember seeing that he was more than just muscles and good looks. Kevin was a sincere, kind, and intelligent man. He would always be reading a new book. The thing that impressed me the most was his down to earth nature and his loyalty to his friends. Kevin moved to LA to continue his acting career and coincidentally I also moved to LA a little later. When in LA I remember seeing him in Mitchum commercials. I remember being so happy for him, thinking that this was a big gig.

Some years passed after his Hercules days. I found myself living in the bay area and working on my book. While out with my daughter's middle school principal, we ran into
